

Liver health

- REDUCES LIVER TOXICITY
- INCREASES BILE PRODUCTION

Dandelion & Celery: These two plants have been mixed together mainly to assist the body with different liver disorders.

Dandelion root

Active constituents: Bitter glycosides, bitter resin taraxacerin, phytosterols, tannins, essential oils, triterpenes, inulin, levulin, saponin, enzyme, citric and silicic acid, minerals, carotenoids, levulose, gluten, gum, vitamins A and C, choline and niacin.

The carotenoid content in this plant is extremely high: 14,000 I.U. of vitamin A per 100 g compared to 11,000 I.U. of vitamin A in carrots.

This herb heads the list of excellent medicinal foods, for the liver and related glands and organs. It cleanses the bloodstream and liver, and increases the production of bile. It stimulates the flow of bile directly and also promotes the flow of bile by inducing contraction of the gallbladder.

Celery seed

Active constituents: essential oils 2–3% including apiol furanocoumarin, flavonoids, fixed oils, asparagin, choline, alkaloid, tyrosin, many minerals and trace minerals, vitamins A, B, C, E.

Celery is a food remedy which is a detoxicant and nutritive at the same time. The main use of celery is in treating chronic deficiency conditions involving toxicosis. It is a good urinary restorative/stimulant remedy and acts as a resolvent and draining diuretic, and a solvent for urinary deposits.

This formula is very useful for treating liver disorders like liver congestion, hepatitis, cirrhosis and liver toxicity as well as kidney disorders. It is a good diuretic. It regenerates the liver and it is helpful with jaundice, edema resulting from liver problems, and fluid retention, rheumatism, gout and stiff joints, bile duct inflammation and gallstones.

All in all, it increases the activity of the liver, pancreas and spleen.
